Hunter Ice Festival draws 24,000 visitors to Niles

By MAXWELL HARDEN

NILES — Residents reveled in the cold and snow last weekend as the Hunter Ice Festival took over downtown Niles.

Niles Main Street/Downtown Development Authority representatives reported the festival, which saw dozens of expertly carved ice sculptures placed around downtown in addition to other activities, was a success, seeing several thousand visitors over the course of Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Lisa Croteau, director of marketing and administrator for Niles Main Street, said more than 24,000 visitors made it downtown for the festival.

Visitors play ice checkers during the 22nd annual Hunter Ice Festival in Niles.

"After the huge snow midweek, the weather stayed on our side this year, and Hunter 2026 proved to be the best Ice Festival we've had in recent years," she said. "Feedback from local businesses has been overwhelmingly positive. It's heartening to see our community come together to enjoy this winter tradition. And with the weather staying cold, the sculptures will be around for a while to enjoy."

The festival celebrates the rich history of the Hunter Ice and Ice Cream Company. Henry and Lemont Hunter owned the first documented commercial ice harvesting industry in Michigan as well as the first industry in Howard Township. Their ice cream and dairy operations were also noted for the purity of their products.

Charles Nelson, owner of On Base Productions, 227 E. Main St., participated in his eighth festival as a downtown storefront owner. His family photo booth has become a festival favorite.

"It's something we truly look forward to every year," he said. "One of the things I'm most proud of is how our photo booth has become a tradition for so many families who make it part of their festival visit each year."

On Base Productions has expanded into the space next door at 225 E. Main Street, where Nelson set up a warming station and handed out several hundred cups of free hot chocolate and coffee during the festival.

"That went really well," he said.

Edwardsburg hosts first village council meeting of 2026

By JUSTIN FLAGEL
Leader Correspondent

EDWARDSBURG — The Edwardsburg Village Council met for a short meeting on Monday to hear updates from various boards and hear comments from the public.

President Dennis Peak reported that the village continues to research the addition of a sidewalk along US-12 near the new location of the Edwardsburg Branch of the Cass District Library. They hope to have an estimated cost in time for finalizing the 2026-27 budget and are researching engineering firms for the project.

The council set a date for an upcoming budget work session. They will meet on Saturday, Feb. 7 at 9 a.m. in the village hall.

President of the Edwardsburg Food Pantry, Scott Scheel, presented the idea of using the old library building as a location for a new food pantry. It was discussed that access to the current food pantry via stairs makes entry difficult for many residents.

The Planning Commission will add a review of the village cannabis retail ordinance to the agenda of their next meeting. During the public comment portion of the meeting, Brett Thompson, owner of Dat Canna, requested the council consider updates to the marijuana ordinance. The village has heard multiple requests for a review in recent months.

The council reviewed several financial transactions and reports. The next Village Council meeting will take place at 6 p.m. Monday, Feb. 16, though the village hall will be closed during the day for Presidents Day.

Local NAACP chapter hosts MLK Community Breakfast

By MAXWELL HARDEN
max.harden@leaderpub.com

NILES — Dozens of community members braved frigid conditions Monday morning to celebrate the life of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. during a community fellowship breakfast at Mt. Calvary Baptist Church in Niles.

Hosted by the NAACP Niles-Buchanan branch and Mt. Calvary, the theme of the event was "Unity in Diversity: Don't Give Up Hope."

"As we gather to honor the enduring Legacy of Dr Martin Luther King, Jr., let us recommit ourselves to his vision. A world where Unity strives through our diversity and where every individual dream is valued and respected," said NAACP President Beverly Woodson. "Our theme 'Unity in Diversity' reminds us that our greatest strength is found in coming together and here we are this morning. The snow did stop us, we made it. We only get one chance once a year to celebrate Dr. King's birthday."

The annual event featured emcee Cam Herth, a musical selection, a youth presentation from JaNora Crooms and special presentations to Grace Harvey and Danielle Lucas for their years of service contributions to the community.

Pastor Lonell Hudson of the Greater New Jerusalem of South Bend is the event's keynote speaker.

"The dream is kept alive by movement. I say to you all this moment – don't give up on the dream, don't give up on each other, don't give up what is possible, don't give up what is right," Hudson said. "The dream is not even distant. The dream is waiting for us to pick it up and carry it forward. May we leave this breakfast not just inspired, but ignited. Not just moved, but mobilized. Not just remembering the dream but recommitting ourselves to the dream. Because as long as we keep working, as long as we keep loving, as long as we keep standing together, the dream will never die."

The NAACP Niles chapter began in March 1942 and had been a voice for human equality by addressing local issues through advocacy and communication, as well as sought to educate members

Committee pulls money from Berrien Talent Collaborative

By LOUISE WREGE

BENTON TOWNSHIP — Work to help young people get apprenticeships in Southwest Michigan through the Berrien Talent Collaborative is moving forward, even though $500,000 in state funding is in limbo.

"For us and for the collaborative, it is full speed ahead. We're not stopping. We're not slowing down," said Al Pscholka, vice president of enrollment, marketing and governmental relations at Lake Michigan College in Benton Township.

In the fall of 2024, the collaborative received $500,000 from the state to help kickstart the program, which is a partnership between LMC, Berrien RESA, Southwest Michigan Regional Chamber and Greater Niles Chamber of Commerce.

However, in December, the funding for the collaborative was among the $645 million in "work projects"

SMC adds five programs

Southwestern Michigan College

DOWAGIAC — At its regular meeting on Jan. 14, the Southwestern Michigan College Board of Trustees approved five new programs.

They include: a one-year certificate in criminal justice; an associate degree in respiratory therapy; a certificate in dental assisting, which will have a home on the upper floor of the Dale A. Lyons Building; a credential in child development associate; and a certificate in practical nursing.

Dr. Melissa Kennedy, dean of the School of Nursing and Health Services, said, "My goal is that students can have a credential, sit for a licensing exam and make a living wage no matter where they end our nursing program. This is the final phase. We already implemented Certified Nursing Assistant (CNA) for when they finish the first semester. This is the next step, for anyone who completes the first and second semester. They can take a seven-week pediatrics and mother/baby course and be eligible to sit for LPN licensing.

"Most Licensed Practical Nurses work in long-term care. We stopped offering it as a stand-alone program because there were not many jobs at the time, but with the growing nursing shortage, LPNs are coming back into hospitals and doctors' offices, while still being the primary providers in long-term care facilities. LPNs can get work experience, then come in third semester for two semesters and move forward" to RN, Kennedy said.

In his president's report, Brent Brewer said, "The Flywheel Effect is in full swing at SMC," referring to a business concept popularized by Jim Collins, describing how sustained momentum builds from consistent, small wins, creating compounding returns and accelerating results over time.

"With a week of registration remaining, as of Monday, we are 151 students ahead of where we were at this time last year, which is 8.5 percent up in head count and 7.6 percent up in contact hours. Housing for spring is at 94 percent of occupancy, compared to 89 percent last year."

"Intercollegiate athletics has certainly played a role," Brewer said, "but the story is bigger than any single factor, the result of many deliberate pushes working together. High-quality online courses designed by our faculty and aligned with strong student demand. Growing dual enrollment participation – we are over 600 for the first time in many years. Improved retention. Technology that truly supports our learners. And more in-demand programs like the ones Dean Kennedy talked about. However, this is a marathon, not a sprint, and we must keep pushing."

Trustee Todd Obren presented Nursing Department Chair Rona Goodrich of Paw Paw with her 10-year service pin.

"Rona's been a nurse for 33 years," Dean Kennedy said. "She's worked across a variety of practice settings throughout her career, including medical surgical nursing, home care, pediatrics, rehabilitation, long-term care, as well as nursing management and director-level roles. Her true passion, however, is teaching. She's been a member of the SMC community since 2015."

Goodrich is married and has two children, 19 and 24, who attend Western Michigan University.

Trustees acknowledged 24 gifts to the SMC Foundation totaling $18,846 and also accepted five donations to the college amounting to $5,516.

FUNDING

that were clawed back by the Republican-led House Appropriations Committee using a seldom-used provision that allows either House or Senate appropriators to disapprove newly requested projects.

The funding was reinstated earlier this month after Michigan Attorney General Dana Nessel ruled the move by the appropriations committee was unconstitutional because it allowed one committee to end funding that had been approved by the House, Senate and governor.

The House Republicans sued and on Friday, a judge issued a temporary restraining order on the expenditure of the funds.

Pscholka said the collaborative has used about $125,000 of the money so far.

"For me, this should really not be a partisan issue. This is about getting jobs for young people in our community, and I don't think that's a partisan issue," Pscholka said. "We'll wait to see what the courts have to say, but we're not stopping and we're not slowing down."

He said he understands what the appropriations committee did because during his time as a state representative from 2010-16, he was chair of the committee for the last two years.

"As I understood it when I was chair, you had the power to do something like that. However, how would you ever negotiate another budget if you did something like that?" Pscholka said. "That if you break the trust, it would be extremely difficult to do another budget. And that's where I think they're going to find themselves."

He said LMC has been doing apprenticeships since the 1940s for college students and the collaborative adds an apprenticeship program for high school students in 11th and 12th grades.

Pscholka said he's uncertain if the collaborative will have to pay back the money it has already received and used if the courts rule in the Republican's favor.

Other projects cut

The Berrien Talent Collaborative isn't the only project in Southwest Michigan that was cut by the House Appropriations Committee.

State Rep. Joey Andrews, D-St. Joseph, told Benton Harbor city commissioners Tuesday that the revitalization of the former State Street Theater in Benton Harbor has had its funding clawed back.

Richard Hensel, president of the Benton Harbor Downtown Development Authority, said after the meeting they were slated to receive $30,000 from the Michigan Economic Development Corp. to pay Wightman in Benton Township to draw up plans for the theater building.

He said they received the first payment of $7,500 early last year.

"We were pretty much done with the work last July and submitted a report and everything and they didn't pay," he said. "We were waiting for the check, thinking it would come any day."

Hensel said the DDA signed an agreement with the state for the money and another agreement with Wightman for the work to be done.

"Then this craziness happened with part of the legislature deciding to take all that money out of projects that were already contracted for and underway," he said. "It's basically theft. They broke a contract."

Andrews said other projects in his district that had their funding clawed back were for a city hall project in Bridgman, a senior center in Casco Township and a small business incubator in South Haven.

He said they have already built the senior center in Casco Township "and then suddenly found out the state wasn't going to reimburse them for it."

Andrews said much of the money for the projects was spent, but not reimbursed by the state yet.

"It's really a pretty fundamental breach, I think, to promise somebody something, watch them spend the money and then say 'no,'" he said.

He said the grants under dispute are what they call legislative enhancement grants, which are requests legislators make individually for their districts.

Andrews said it will likely take several months for this case to be resolved in the courts because whoever loses will probably appeal.

"I expect this to end up in front of the Supreme Court at some point. I'll say we are pretty confident that we're going to prevail in front of the Supreme Court," Andrews said. "It's just a matter of how long it takes for us to get to the Supreme Court. So just expect updates from our office as we go and we learn new things."

The case is currently in the Michigan Court of Claims.

and the public on history and current concerns. The chapter was dissolved in 2018 due to low participation before being revived in 2024 as the Niles-Buchanan chapter.

Event organizers believe Dr. King's message is more important now than ever, and hope that the breakfast will inspire and encourage people to continue working towards a more equitable and just society.

Mt. Calvary Pastor Bryant Bacon thanked those in attendance and encouraged everyone to make Dr. King's dream a reality.

"We're grateful today to be here to celebrate the legacy, the memory and the work of who Dr. King was," said Mt. Calvary Pastor Bryant Bacon. "I know what the dream was and it's time to wake up now and go to work to make the dream a fulfillment. Let's not leave this dreaming, let's leave here working to make this thing happen. We've done enough dreaming and it's time to start working now and putting this thing into action.

Sports stadium deals hand even more taxpayer money to billionaires

By KEVIN HARDY
Stateline.org (TNS)

When Washington, D.C., agreed to hand over billions in land and tax breaks for a new Commanders football stadium, experts thought it would long remain an outlier in sweetheart deals for sports teams.

But just months later, attention turned to Kansas, where officials in December announced plans to fund 60 percent of a new stadium for the NFL's Kansas City Chiefs. The state committed to spending up to $1.8 billion – the largest-ever professional sports subsidy.

Geoffrey Propheter, who studies stadium deals as an associate professor in the School of Public Affairs at the University of Colorado Denver, thought the Commanders deal would stand out for years to come "for how ludicrous it was."

The D.C. Council in September finalized a plan to dedicate more than $1 billion in public funds to move the Commanders some 7 miles from a suburb in Maryland to a new facility planned for the old RFK Stadium site.

The city's deal, which offers free riverfront land and exclusive development rights, means the district could forgo between $6 billion and $25 billion in revenue over time, Propheter said. By his calculations, that makes the planned Commanders stadium project the most valuable package ever awarded to a sports team. The team is primarily owned by Josh Harris, an investor with a net worth above $11 billion who also owns majority stakes in the NBA's Philadelphia 76ers and the NHL's New Jersey Devils.

The stadium deals in Washington and Kansas – both involving relocations within the same metropolitan area – have set separate records for taxpayer subsidies to sports teams. They serve as further evidence that public officials are uninterested in curbing giveaways to billionaire team owners, despite decades of research suggesting stadiums are a wasteful use of limited tax dollars.

And the deals could further push up the public price tag for projects in Chicago, Denver and Newark, New Jersey, all of which are discussing new or upgraded venues for NFL and NHL teams.

"Kansas lawmakers have done every NFL team and every pro-subsidy lawmaker everywhere else in the country a huge favor, because now teams can look at the Kansas deal and say, 'Hey, what we're asking for is not nearly as bad or as crazy or stupid as what Kansas is offering,'" Propheter said. "So now we've just pushed the expectation upward."

Decades of research has found stadium subsidies are a poor investment of public dollars. Yet the median, inflation-adjusted stadium subsidy amount has ballooned over time.

The Chiefs deal is poised to surpass the $1.48 billion in inflation-adjusted dollars awarded to Montreal's Olympic Stadium, opened in 1976, marking it as the costliest outlay ever in the U.S. and Canada, said J.C. Bradbury, a Kennesaw State University economics professor who researches stadium subsidies.

Adjusted to 2024 dollars, the median stadium subsidy for projects that opened in the 2010s was about $400 million. That increased to $605 million for projects slated to open in the 2020s. Already, 2030s-era projects have reached a median of $825 million, he said.

"There are many different ways we can measure these deals," he said, "but by any metric, the recent Chiefs and Commanders deals are historically high."

The Kansas deal

Kansas officials pushed aggressively to lure the Chiefs some 20 miles from their longtime home at Arrowhead Stadium in Kansas City, Missouri.

Officials maintained the new stadium would spur billions of dollars in economic activity despite serious questions from experts and local officials about taxpayers' ability to cover the massive new debt.

"Quite frankly, I believe [it is] the biggest economic win we'll ever have in the state of Kansas," Republican state House Speaker Dan Hawkins said last month.

But officials also acknowledged the pursuit was about more than economics: Democratic Gov. Laura Kelly said landing the NFL team would make Kansas a tourist destination, help retain young people and defy stereotypes of Kansas as a flyover state.

"And what could be cooler than being home to the Kansas City Chiefs?" she said.

Kansas officials, the Chiefs and the Commanders did not respond to Stateline's questions about the deals.

The Chiefs are owned by the Hunt family of Texas, one of the nation's wealthiest families, estimated by Forbes to be worth nearly $25 billion.

As both the Chiefs and MLB's Kansas City Royals – also in Missouri – openly weighed new stadiums in 2024, lawmakers in Topeka passed legislation amplifying an already lucrative tax incentive program to lure a pro sports team across State Line Road.

To fund Kansas' expected $1.8 billion share of the new Chiefs stadium, state officials will divert sales taxes from a wide swath of the metropolitan area to pay back stadium debt. Officials say that won't cause tax increases, but those tax diversions could cut deep into other city and state spending priorities.

Neil deMause, a journalist who has written extensively about stadium subsidies, said Kansas was effectively "negotiating against itself," since Missouri was not prepared to offer such a lucrative deal. The same situation was true in Washington, he said, as it became clear that Maryland and Virginia, which were also vying for the new stadium, would not offer billions in free land and other benefits.

The new Chiefs stadium will be owned by the state, meaning the team won't be subject to property taxes, a lucrative perk. The Chiefs will pay rent, but those funds will go into an account that can be used for ongoing facility maintenance and security. The state will also contribute millions to that fund every year.

The Chiefs will keep all revenue from ticket sales, parking and concessions, including for nonfootball events such as concerts and Final Four basketball games.

In Missouri, the Chiefs had previously committed $126 million in funding for education, transportation, health care and other community benefits over a 40-year period. But no such arrangement has been announced in Kansas.

In a nonbinding 33-page term sheet released by the state, the team agreed to set aside $3 million per year for a community impact fund. That fund, though, is controlled by the Chiefs, who can spend it on charitable endeavors or on profit-generating, team-branded ventures like fitness clubs.

The Chiefs also agreed to match their current charitable and volunteer efforts in Missouri, but neither the team nor Kansas officials answered questions on how that provision would be calculated or enforced.

Kansas will receive some access to its stadium for events including graduation ceremonies and free concerts, but those are subject to team-determined availability, and the state must cover all costs.

State officials are guaranteed one stadium suite for most events. But the term sheet notes that state officials must pay for their own food, except for free soda and water.

"They could have at least held out for free jerseys or something," deMause said.

'It's about panic'

The lopsided deal in Kansas will likely boost efforts by other team owners looking to update their facilities, deMause said.

"For whatever reason, we're in a moment where team owners feel entitled to demand a lot more billions of dollars than anybody else has," he said. "And the more they get away with that, the more their fellow owners are going to be emboldened to ask for the same thing."

In Illinois, lawmakers have discussed for years an effort to relocate the NFL's Chicago Bears from Soldier Field to a new site along Lake Michigan in Chicago or in the suburb of Arlington Heights. For decades, the team has been primarily owned by the McCaskey family. Last month, Bears President and CEO Kevin Warren cited a lack of "legislative partnership" in announcing the team would explore a potential stadium in neighboring Indiana.

That news received an icy reception from Illinois lawmakers, the Chicago Sun-Times reported.

"I don't believe it's a real threat," said Illinois state Rep. Kam Buckner, a Democrat whose district includes parts of Chicago's South Side. Buckner said lawmakers have been pushing the team to provide a more detailed proposal before approving a package of taxpayer-funded site and infrastructure improvements.

Buckner said lawmakers in Springfield watched the Kansas stadium deal closely, but are determined not to follow a similar route.

"What happened in Kansas is exactly what Illinois should not do," he said. "Kansas is preparing to hand billions of public dollars to one of the wealthiest ownership families in professional sports history – not for schools, not for transit, not for housing, but to subsidize a stadium for a team that's already printing money."

Buckner said his constituents have a long list of legislative priorities – ranging from health care to affordability issues – ahead of professional sports.

A devout Bears fan, Buckner said he won't be drawn into a "hostage negotiation" with the team.

"It's about panic. It's about fear," he said. "It's about this system that we've created, where, if you don't overpay, a billionaire might just take his toys and leave town, and folks are scared of that."

"For whatever reason, we're in a moment where team owners feel entitled to demand a lot more billions of dollars than anybody else has. And the more they get away with that, the more their fellow owners are going to be emboldened to ask for the same thing."

Niles man gets jail, probation for assaulting girlfriend

By DEBRA HAIGHT
News Correspondent

CASSOPOLIS — A Niles man who assaulted his girlfriend after she called him for help when she ran out of gas was sentenced to probation and jail Friday, Jan. 16 in sentencings in Cass County Circuit Court at the Law & Courts Building.

Ahren Michael Canfield, 31, of Detroit Road in Niles, pleaded guilty to third offense domestic violence and was sentenced to three years probation, 330 days in jail with credit for 75 days served, completion of anger management and mental health programs, $3,128 in fines and costs and $270 in restitution.

CANFIELD

The incident occurred Sept. 25, 2025 in Howard Township. Police responded to a 911 call from a gas station on M-60 in Howard Township. The victim said she had been struck multiple times by Canfield and was hiding in the gas station. Police witnessed red marks around her head and neck when they arrived.

Cass County Prosecutor Victor Fitz noted this was actually Canfield's fifth conviction for domestic violence. "He has some really troubling history and the current offense is extremely concerning," Fitz said. "He's a ticking time bomb who needs to find a way to defuse."

He called Canfield's behavior "cowardly" and like the "tantrums of a child." He also pointed out that Canfield has attempted to contact the victim over 900 times while he has been in jail despite a no contact order.

Defense attorney Nicholas Hogue agreed that it was a serious domestic violence incident and said he and his client are not trying to minimize what happened. Hogue asked for a sentence that would allow Canfield to get help rather than just "warehousing" him in jail.

"I'm ashamed for the people I've hurt," Canfield said. "I know I'm here for something serious that I did, something I need to be accountable for. I can't do it by myself, I need programs. I know it's time to change and be a man."

Cass County Circuit Court Judge Mark Herman said that Canfield's domestic violence convictions date back to 2014. While Canfield has done well on probation and supervision, he has continued to commit crimes after his probations have ended.

"You were ordered to have no contact but you made 964 calls to her," the judge said. "You were making calls as late as Jan. 9 when you were in jail for another assault and battery charge from December. You would think when you're pending sentencing, you would be extra careful about what you're doing."

"You're 31 years old, old enough to know how not to treat people," he added. "Is this how you respond if someone calls you for help? When I looked at what happened and the fact you called her 964 times, if she was the love of your life, you wouldn't be beating on her. If you want respect, you have to give her respect."

"This is your second felony domestic violence conviction, it's just time you get your anger in check," the judge said. "Stop assaulting women or next time I send you to prison. I'm not going to just warehouse you, I will put you on probation and give you things to accomplish. If you don't, it's prison. Is that what you want?"

Another Niles resident who drove drunk and fled police and later absconded from bond was sentenced to probation.

Dean Allan Kietzer, 50, of North Fifth Street in Niles, pleaded guilty as a habitual offender to third offense drunk driving, fleeing police and open container of alcohol in a motor vehicle and was sentenced to three years probation in Adult Treatment Court, credit for 61 days served, $2,846 in fines and costs and $290 in restitution.

KIETZER

The incident occurred Oct. 14, 2023 in Pokagon Township. Police observed him crossing the center line of the highway several time and attempted to stop him. He fled for 13 miles at speeds of 70 miles per hour. He then stopped the vehicle and fled on foot.

He also pleaded guilty to absconding from bond and was sentenced to a concurrent three years probation in the Adult Treatment Court, credit for 61 days served and $698 in fines and costs.

That occurred when he failed to appear for trial on the drunk driving and related charges.

Judge Herman noted that Kietzer has 12 felony and 17 misdemeanor convictions and has been to prison five times. He said that Kietzer faces another prison term if he is unsuccessful on this probation.

"You need to consider yourself very fortunate," the judge said. "You're lucky you were given this opportunity. Without it, you would be going to prison today … At your age, you need to look at what you want out of life. You've got more life behind you than you have ahead of you. If you don't seize this opportunity, you won't have much of a life."

tampering with an electronic monitoring device and was sentenced to credit for 139 days served and $1,048 in fines and costs. The incident occurred June 24, 2025 in Cassopolis.

Faith Sisk, 24, of Decatur, pleaded guilty to possession of methamphetamine and was sentenced to 18 months probation, credit for 69 days served and $1,888 in fines and costs. The conviction will be kept off her record if she is successful on probation. The incident occurred July 9, 2025 in Wayne Township near Dowagiac.

She also has an outstanding charge in Van Buren County.

K-12 schools developing policies on AI

When it comes down to it, districts are largely on their own

Yet there is generally a lack of evidence related to how AI will affect learners and teachers, which will take years to become more clear. That lag adds to the challenges in formulating policies.

Generative artificial intelligence technology is rapidly reshaping education in unprecedented ways. With its potential benefits and risks, K-12 schools are actively trying to adapt teaching and learning.

But as schools seek to navigate into the age of generative AI, there's a challenge: Schools are operating in a policy vacuum. While a number of states offer guidance on AI, only a couple of states require local schools to form specific policies, even as teachers, students and school leaders continue to use generative AI in countless new ways. As a policymaker noted in a survey, "You have policy and what's actually happening in the classrooms – those are two very different things."

As part of my lab's research on AI and education policy, I conducted a survey in late 2025 with members of the National Association of State Boards of Education, the only nonprofit dedicated solely to helping state boards advance equity and excellence in public education. The survey of the association's members reflects how education policy is typically formed through dynamic interactions across national, state and local levels, rather than being dictated by a single source.

But even in the absence of hard-and-fast rules and guardrails on how AI can be used in schools, education policymakers identified a number of ethical concerns raised by the technology's spread, including student safety, data privacy and negative impacts on student learning.

They also expressed concerns over industry influence and that schools will later be charged by technology providers for large language model-based tools that are currently free. Others report that administrators in their state are very concerned about deepfakes: "What happens when a student deepfakes my voice and sends it out to cancel school or bomb threat?"

At the same time, policymakers said teaching students to use AI technology to their benefit remains a priority.

Local actions dominate

Although chatbots have been widely available for more than three years, the survey revealed that states are in the early stages of addressing generative AI, with most yet to implement official policies. While many states are providing guidance or tool kits, or are starting to write state-level policies, local decisions dominate the landscape, with each school district primarily responsible for shaping its own plans.

When asked whether their state has implemented any generative AI policies, respondents said there was a high degree of local influence regardless of whether a state issued guidance or not. "We are a 'local control' state, so some school districts have banned (generative AI)," wrote one respondent. "Our (state) department of education has an AI tool kit, but policies are all local," wrote another. One shared that their state has a "basic requirement that districts adopt a local policy about AI."

Like other education policies, generative AI adoption occurs within the existing state education governance structures, with authority and accountability balanced between state and local levels. As with previous waves of technology in K-12 schools, local decision-making plays a critical role.

Yet there is generally a lack of evidence related to how AI will affect learners and teachers, which will take years to become more clear. That lag adds to the challenges in formulating policies.

States as a lighthouse

However, state policy can provide vital guidance by prioritizing ethics, equity and safety, and by being adaptable to changing needs. A coherent state policy can also answer key questions, such as acceptable student use of AI, and ensure more consistent standards of practice. Without such direction, districts are left to their own devices to identify appropriate, effective uses and construct guardrails.

As it stands, AI usage and policy development are uneven, depending on how well resourced a school is. Data from a RAND-led panel of educators showed that teachers and principals in higher-poverty schools are about half as likely to AI guidance provided. The poorest schools are also less likely to use AI tools.

When asked about foundational generative AI policies in education, policymakers focused on privacy, safety and equity. One respondent, for example, said school districts should have the same access to funding and training, including for administrators.

And rather than having the technology imposed on schools and families, many argued for grounding the discussion in human values and broad participation. As one policymaker noted, "What is the role that families play in all this? This is something that is constantly missing from the conversation and something to uplift. As we know, parents are our kids' first teachers."

Introducing new technology

According to a Feb. 24, 2025, Gallup Poll, 60 percent of teachers report using some AI for their work in a range of ways. Our survey also found there is "shadow use of AI," as one policymaker put it, where employees implement generative AI without explicit school or district IT or security approval.

Some states, such as Indiana, offer schools the opportunity to apply for a one-time competitive grant to fund a pilot of an AI-powered platform of their choosing as long as the product vendors are approved by the state. Grant proposals that focus on supporting students or professional development for educators receive priority.

In other states, schools opt in to pilot tests that are funded by nonprofits. For example, an eighth grade language arts teacher in California participated in a pilot where she used AI-powered tools to generate feedback on her students' writing. "Teaching 150 kids a day and providing meaningful feedback for every student is not possible; I would try anything to lessen grading and give me back my time to spend with kids. This is why I became a teacher: to spend time with the kids." This teacher also noted the tools showed bias when analyzing the work of her students learning English, which gave her the opportunity to discuss algorithmic bias in these tools.

One initiative from the Netherlands offers a different approach than finding ways to implement products developed by technology companies. Instead, schools take the lead with questions or challenges they are facing and turn to industry to develop solutions informed by research.

Core principles

One theme that emerged from survey respondents is the need to emphasize ethical principles in providing guidance on how to use AI technology in teaching and learning. This could begin with ensuring that students and teachers learn about the limitations and opportunities of generative AI, when and how to leverage these tools effectively, critically evaluate its output and ethically disclose its use.

Often, policymakers struggle to know where to begin in formulating policies. Analyzing tensions and decision-making in organizational context – or what my colleagues and I called dilemma analysis in a recent report – is an approach schools, districts and states can take to navigate the myriad of ethical and societal impacts of generative AI.

Despite the confusion around AI and a fragmented policy landscape, policymakers said they recognize it is incumbent upon each school, district and state to engage their communities and families to co-create a path forward.

As one policymaker put it: "Knowing the horse has already left the barn (and that AI use) is already prevalent among students and faculty … (on) AI-human collaboration vs. outright ban, where on the spectrum do you want to be?"

Pokagon Band calls for immediate retirement of Native-themed mascots, nicknames

By MAXWELL HARDEN
max.harden@leaderpub.com

DOWAGIAC — The Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians is asking school districts and sports teams to retire their Native-themed mascots, nicknames and imagery.

The Pokagon Band's Representation and Outreach Board released a statement Wednesday night calling for the immediate retirement of all Native American mascots, imagery and nicknames by schools and sports teams at every level.

"Our position is clear and unwavering; the Pokagon Band is formally opposed to the use of such imagery," the statement said. "The use of Native American-themed mascots and names is a harmful practice that perpetuates damaging stereotypes and create hostile and unsafe learning environments for Native and non-native youth alike, undermining their self-esteem and emotional well-being. Schools should be places that provide all students with a safe, supportive, and respectful educational experience – not environments that memorialize the exploitation, violence, and genocide of Native people.

"Our tribal resolutions condemning this practice and our years of work with school boards, administrators and community members to move toward this shared vision demonstrate our dedication to the well-being of all youth in our community," the statement continued. "We are prepared to be a resource for schools and communities seeking a greater understanding of our culture and we stand in solidarity with all who are working toward this necessary change."

In 2022, the Native American Heritage Fund announced funding to four Michigan school districts to assist with the cost of replacing their mascots, including Saranac Community Schools, Hartford Public Schools, Lansing School District and the Chippewa Hills School District. Locally, Dowagiac and White Pigeon are two of seven Michigan districts that use the nicknames Chiefs or Chieftains.

Many tribes and organizations within the state of Michigan and across the United States have resolutions that condemn and call for ending the use of Native American logos, mascots and nicknames including the Michigan Board of Education, the Michigan Department of Civil Rights, United Tribes of Michigan (which comprise the 12 federally recognized tribes in the state), the Michigan Coalition Against Racism in Sports and Media, and the National Congress of American Indians.

Wednesday's statement was the latest response in a decades-long conversation about the continued use of Native American mascots, logos and nicknames in schools and sports. The Dowagiac Union Schools Board of Education hosted a special meeting in February 2025 to listen to a presentation from the Tribal Council of the Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians of Michigan and Indiana on the subject as well as receive public input from community members.

In August 2023, the Dowagiac Board of Education announced that it was keeping its nickname "Chieftains" and its logo, despite requests from the Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians to remove both. In October 2023, the Pokagon Band Tribal Council sent a letter to the Dowagiac Union Schools Board rescinding the joint resolution from 1990, which had involved the creation of a new logo by tribal citizen Ron Mix to better represent a Pokagon Band member and created programs to educate students and the public about the history of the tribe.

The October 2023 letter stated that several organizations, including the Representations Outreach Board, had requested that the school district discontinue the use of the nickname and logo. The Outreach Board felt it was important to nullify the 1990 agreement as it was not being followed. According to the tribe, there were several different logos being used by the school system other than the logo designed by Ron Mix, which was approved in the 1990 agreement as a better representation of a Pokagon Band member.

In March 2021, the Pokagon Band Tribal Council formally adopted a resolution condemning the use of Native American imagery by non-native organizations.

The Tribal Council has shared studies on the damaging effects Native American mascots have on indigenous children, including a resolution by the American Psychological Association, which calls for the end of their use. To date, several school districts in the state of Michigan have retired their Native American logos, mascots and nicknames, following consultation with Native American Tribes.

"This is about kids. It's only about kids," said Tribal Council Chairman Matthew Wesaw to the Dowagiac school board during the February 2025 meeting. "I've been involved in a number of these issues around the state and have been invited to participate in a lot of them to give the native perspective on what this does. I know it's going to be difficult to make the change. I know you will take some heat from the voters. I know you may be in a position where you like what you're doing and you don't want to get voted out of office, but one of your main responsibilities is to create the safest, best learning environment for the students that are here. Not just the majority, all students. If you've got one student who's negatively impacted, you need to look at that.

"I know there's been agreements over the years with the tribal councils supporting the logo," Wesaw continued. "Nobody thinks any of this was done to be disrespectful. It was all well-intentioned, but times change and I think research shows that time has changed. So I would just strongly encourage you to put together the process, whatever it may be, to look at coming up with something different."

"Nobody thinks any of this was done to be disrespectful. It was all well-intentioned, but times change ... I would just strongly encourage you to put together the process, whatever it may be, to look at coming up with something different."

EDWARDSBURG — The Edwardsburg girls basketball team braved the cold and played Paw Paw in a Wolverine Conference clash last night.

The Eddies led 45-32 after three before the Red Wolves made a run in the fourth quarter to push Edwardsburg to the brink but the Eddies used their toughness and grit to get the job done.

Kya Shier had a double-double with 20 points, 10 rebounds, six steals and three assists and Shelby Laubach tallied 20 points, seven rebounds, five steals, and two assists while Mallory Schrock added 18 points, seven rebounds and four steals.

Lakeshore hires Buchanan's Frey as new head football coach

By MAXWELL HARDEN
max.harden@leaderpub.com

BUCHANAN — The Buchanan football program will have a new head coach in 2026, as Lakeshore announced Mark Frey as its new head coach Tuesday.

Frey will look to build on a proud tradition of Lakeshore Football that has compiled 27 playoff appearances, 19 conference championships, 10 district championships, five regional champinonships and five state semi-final appearances.

"It is a privilege to lead a program with such a storied history as Lakeshore High School," Frey said. "Our goal is to honor the legacy of those who came before us while pushing the program and our student-athletes to their maximum potential. We will compete at the highest level, on and off the field, and I cannot wait to get started with our student-athletes."

Before coaching at Buchanan, he served as the head coach for five seasons at Riverdale High School in Ohio. Coach Frey also coached the wide receivers, tight ends, secondary, and kickers at Ohio Northern University from 2013-2014, cornerbacks, kickers and punters at Dordt College from 2012-2013, and cornerbacks, kickers and tight ends at Concord High School in Indiana from 2011-2012.

In seven seasons with Buchanan, Frey guided the Bucks to a 41-27 record, five playoff appearances and three conference championships while attaining a 100 percent graduation rate for players that played four years in the football program. His teams were named academic all-state five times and finished top four in the state once. For his efforts, Frey was voted the MHSFCA Region Coach of the Year in 2020 and 2022 and grew the program from 27 players to over 60 players.

During his tenure, Buchanan beat their archrival Brandywine six out of eight times.

"I feel truly blessed to have served as Head Football Coach at Buchanan High School over the past seven years," Frey said. "I can say that not only did we transform Buchanan Football, but this school transformed my career and for that I will forever be grateful."

During his coaching career, Frey has developed 102 all-conference players, 25 all-region players, seven all-state players, six DI/DII scholarship players, 23 academic all-state players, developed a secondary that finished 10th in the nation in interceptions at Ohio Northern University in 2013 and developed 2nd round NFL draft pick Jason Springs.

"Mark impressed us with his extensive experience and his ability to create a culture focused on preparation, confidence and high character, " said Lakeshore Athletic Director Greg Younger. "We are very excited to welcome him and his family to Lakeshore. He has a proven track record with a vast array of experience that he will bring to our program and will be able to hit the ground running."

Frey thanked the Buchanan community for their support over the past seven years.

"To our past and present players, it has been the joy of a lifetime to coach you," he said. "Thank you for giving everything you have, both on the field and in the classroom. To the coaches who dedicated countless hours to our players and our program, nothing we achieved could have been done without you.

"I am also grateful for the support of our Superintendent, Patricia Robinson; Our Principal, Brian Pruet; our School Board and the entire Buchanan community. To the parents, fans, cheerleaders and band who fill the stadium and make Friday Night Lights a tradition unlike any other thank you. I know this team is set up for another successful year ahead and I look forward to following you all, as I will always have a special place in my heart for the Bucks."

If Indiana can win, anything is possible

By JOHN ROMANO
Tampa Bay Times (TNS)

MIAMI GARDENS, Fla. — The field was covered in red-and-white confetti, and the Heisman Trophy quarterback was covered in bruises. The college football season had just come down to the very final minute, and a team of perpetual sorrow was dancing toward glory.

This is what it looks like when reality surpasses fantasy.

No. 1 Indiana, emerging from a century of gloom, won the College Football Playoff national championship game, 27-21, against No. 10 Miami on Monday night in what feels like a seismic shift in possibilities for forgotten programs everywhere.

Were they watching Monday night in Starkville, Miss.?

How about in Ames, Iowa? Maybe even in the shadow of a new campus stadium in Tampa?

"We're 16-0 and national champions at Indiana University," head coach Curt Cignetti said. "I know a lot of people thought that was never possible. It's probably one of the greatest sports stories of all time."

The Hoosiers, a team that had not won a conference championship in nearly 60 years and was more than 200 games below .500 before Cignetti arrived in 2024, went 16-0 and won the national championship just two years after going 3-9. If that kind of turnaround is possible in the new world of college football, can any dream be considered too outlandish in the days to come?

Quarterback Fernando Mendoza, who grew up just miles from Hard Rock Stadium and was all but ignored by his beloved University of Miami as a Columbus High senior, played a virtually flawless game despite a fierce pass rush from the Hurricanes.

"Tonight is going to be an insane night," Mendoza said during the onfield trophy presentation. "I can't wait to get back to Bloomington with the guys."

The Bears' next challenge? Avoiding regression

Brad Biggs

Long, blank stares across players' faces Sunday night in the Chicago Bears locker room at Soldier Field reflected the abrupt ending of the season.

Harrison Mevis' 42-yard field goal in overtime propelled the Los Angeles Rams to a 20-17 victory and the NFC championship game. Fourteen hours later, Bears players were filling oversized cardboard boxes with belongings Monday morning at Halas Hall.

"It hurts because everybody puts a lot into this," said defensive end Daniel Hardy, speaking slowly as he parsed his thoughts. "We all sacrifice so much. And you hate it ending like that. Nobody picked us to be here. Nobody gave us a chance. We just believed. We did it as a group. We stuck together. When the pressure was on, it just made us closer.

"Just knowing it's never going to be the same group of guys ever, that's really the tough part. I would take this group of guys over anybody if we could run this back. That's the business we're in, and that's why every year counts. Lot of love and appreciation for these guys and these coaches and the way we came in and turned the culture around, turned the team around and helped ignite the city."

That's the cold reality of the NFL. It won't be the same in 2026, even if general manager Ryan Poles works to bring back a portion of the 24 free agents on the roster.

After an 0-2 start, the Bears emerged as one of the league's better stories, winning nine of their next 10 games, many with stunning last-minute rallies. Eventually they did what Poles talked about when he was hired four years ago – they took the NFC North.

Quarterback Caleb Williams made dramatic improvement over the course of the season. Those curious about his ability to settle into Johnson's offense at the start of the season had become believers well before Williams threw it into reverse on fourth-and-4 from the 14-yard line in the final minute of regulation Sunday, retreated more than 25 yards and launched a touchdown pass to tight end Cole Kmet to force overtime.

Williams' ascent – paired with the emergence of an offensive line that paved the way for the league's third-ranked rushing attack and a stable of skill-position talent, including blossoming rookie tight end Colston Loveland – leaves plenty to like, especially when considering what coach Ben Johnson and his staff can accomplish with natural growth in Year 2.

As demanding and exacting as Johnson was while installing the offense last spring, he'll be the same in pushing players to reach the next level in 2026. There's work to be done on defense, but wise coordinator Dennis Allen showed creative vision even in times when he appeared short-handed, including against the Rams. Holding Matthew Stafford, Puka Nacua and the league's top-ranked offense to 17 points in regulation should have been good enough for a victory.

The Bears learned how to win in their first season above .500 since 2018 while also earning their first playoff victory in 15 years. That's a valuable lesson for those who will return – and that those headed elsewhere can take with them.

From 2022 through 2024, the Bears had a combined 15 victories. They had 12 this season, including the wild-card triumph over the Green Bay Packers.

"It was amazing," said defensive end Dominique Robinson, who will be a free agent after arriving in the 2022 draft class.

St. Brown tells Lions fans to let OC hire 'play out'

By NOLAN BIANCHI
The Detroit News (TNS)

Like a lot of Detroit Lions fans who heard the news about their team's new offensive coordinator on Monday, wide receiver Amon-Ra St. Brown must admit he didn't know much about Drew Petzing.

But now that Petzing is on board for at least the 2026 season, St. Brown offered a full vote of confidence for his new play-caller and coordinator, who comes to the Lions after three up-and-down seasons in the same role with the Arizona Cardinals.

St. Brown, a four-time Pro Bowler and three-time All-Pro, said he saw the (largely negative) reaction to Petzing's hiring and urged fans to trust Lions coach Dan Campbell. Most of the blowback stems from a particularly down year for the Cardinals as a whole in 2025, as well as a lack of familiarity among a fanbase hoping to reel in a household name like former Miami Dolphins coach Mike McDaniel.

"I see crazy Lions fans talking crazy, like, 'Oh, why would we do this?' Bro, do you guys have no trust in Dan, in the Lions? You think they would just hire a random dude? Be for real," St. Brown said on his podcast, the "St. Brown Podcast," which he hosts with his brother, Equanimeous.

"You think they don't know what they're doing? They don't do their research? They don't interview? Most of you guys don't know really much about anything, about any ball. And you're tweeting about a coach that was hired that you guys don't like because of X, Y, Z. It's just funny to me to see. Don't get me wrong, I love all Lions fans. But they are so quick to make judgments about who we hired. ... Bro, just relax. Calm down, let the whole thing play out. Let it play out, just relax. That's all I've got to say: Relax, man. Relax."

St. Brown's production might be coordinator-proof – he caught 117 passes for 1,401 yards and 11 touchdowns and was named second-team All-Pro in a lackluster year for the Lions' offense under first-year coordinator John Morton – but his team has a ton at stake in the success of Petzing after going 9-8 and missing the playoffs with a last-place finish in the NFC North.

The team elected to part ways with Morton, who had already had his play-calling duties stripped midseason, at season's end. As the coaching carousel went into full swing, St. Brown said he was getting antsy about the lack of a hire and was texting quarterback Jared Goff about it the morning they landed Petzing.

"I feel great," St. Brown said of the hire. "... I texted Jared, I was like, 'What do you think we're gonna do?' He said he doesn't really know yet, but he mentioned Drew Petzing. I'm like, 'Oh, I never – I don't even know we interviewed him.' Like, that's not someone that was really being talked about. He said he was with the Cardinals, and he said he's good, he's smart. Although they didn't have the best offense, he does a lot of good stuff."

Notre Dame's O'Brien named to U.S. Olympic Bobsled Team

SUBMITTED

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Former Notre Dame track & field athlete Jadin O'Brien has been named to the 2026 U.S. Olympic Bobsled and Skeleton Team for the two-woman bobsled, as announced by Team USA on Monday.

O'Brien is one of six athletes to earn a spot on three teams that will compete in Italy next month, and she will compete as a push athlete in the two-woman bobsled event.

Women's Bobsled Athletes (pilot/push athlete):

- Kaillie Armbruster Humphries / Jasmine Jones
- Kaysha Love / Azaria Hill
- Elana Meyers Taylor / Jadin O'Brien

A native of Pewaukee, Wisconsin, O'Brien is one of the most decorated track & field athletes in Notre Dame program history. She was a three time NCAA Champion in the pentathlon and was twice the NCAA Runner-Up in the heptathlon. A ten-time All-American and two-time Olympic Trials Qualifier in the heptathlon, O'Brien was the 2025 USTFCCCA Indoor and Outdoor Great Lakes Region Field Athlete of the Year. In 2025, she became the fifth four-time indoor champion in ACC history with her fourth-consecutive pentathlon title. She also became the first combined athlete ever to accomplish the feat of being a four-time indoor ACC champion.

It is the first USA Bobsled Team selection for O'Brien, who had earned a spot on the World Cup team for Team USA in September. She was part of a fourth-place finish alongside teammate Elana Meyers Taylor at the International Bobsleigh and Skeleton Federation World Cup races in December in Sigulda, Latvia.

The 2026 Winter Olympic Games take place in Italy. The bobsled portion of the Olympics will be held at the Cortina Sliding Centre, and the two-woman official training heats begin on February 17.

"The culture here in the city. Just that pregame buzz. The national anthem. The experience was just a lot better this year. People were involved. It just felt better.

"It's fun when you're winning. Completely different. You're not stressed out. You're not worried about who's getting released and all this other stuff. People are stressed out when you're losing and the organization is trying to find a way to win.

"All my boys are here. We're having a good time. It was like college again. I'm glad we were able to turn it around and go out a little bit on top. No moral victories. From the three years we had before to this, that's going out on top."

The Bears and New England Patriots – who will play the Broncos in the AFC championship game Sunday in Denver – both went from worst to first this season. Since 2002, when the NFL went to eight four-team divisions, 27 teams have gone from worst to first. Of the previous 25, only eight repeated as a playoff team the following season.

That's the challenge ahead of the Bears – avoiding the grip of regression – as Johnson enters an offseason with the focus squarely on decisions to ensure sustained success.

"This is my first playoff win since 2019 in Tennessee," said free safety Kevin Byard III, an All-Pro this season who also is a pending free agent. "I have been back to the playoffs three other times, but I've been a (No.) 1 seed, got bounced out in the divisional round, then missed the playoffs the next year. Then went to Philly, got bounced out of a wild card.

"This is not something that's very easy to do at all, but I have belief in this group, in this team, in this organization. We're all having these talks like, 'Hey, man, we've got to run this back.' But there's no guarantee that it's going to happen again. It's going to definitely be tough to do."

The Bears did ignite the city, as Hardy said, and they restored faith in a franchise that hadn't done a lot to earn it or certainly retain it in the last decade and a half. Poles and Johnson are expected to share their thoughts on the season later this week and perhaps offer hints to the offseason ahead.

As players filtered out with gear to stuff in their vehicles, their heads were high. Exit meetings offered words of encouragement with a few things to work on while they're on their own.

In the hallway stood a small group of veteran scouts. Told they had made a good run, there were affirmative nods.

"Not far enough," one said.

Brad Biggs covers the Chicago Bears for the Chicago Tribune.

ROMANO

There was nothing accidental about what Indiana accomplished this season. The record was perfect, and it was absolutely a reflection of the team's play.

The Hoosiers were disciplined (fifth in the nation in penalties per game), they were explosive (second in points per game), they were stingy (second in points allowed per game) and they were smart (first in turnover margin).

They beat defending national champion Ohio State in the Big Ten Championship Game, and then crushed Alabama and Oregon by a combined 94-25 in their first two playoff games. All that stood in Indiana's way was a Miami team that defied projections with upsets of higher-seeded teams in the first two rounds of the playoffs before dispatching Ole Miss in the semifinals.

The Hoosiers controlled the ball and frustrated the Hurricanes in the first half, and then came up with clutch plays on offense and special teams in the second half as Miami staged a furious comeback.

And, in the end, Indiana's fearlessness was the difference.

After Miami had cut the lead to 17-14, the Hoosiers answered with a touchdown drive for the ages. It wasn't that they held the ball for 12 plays or that they traveled 75 yards. It was that Cignetti put faith in his quarterback on a fourth-and-5 instead of punting from the Miami 37, and then again on fourth down from the Miami 4. On the first conversion, Mendoza hit Charlie Becker on a 19-yard, back-shoulder completion. That was just the appetizer.

On fourth down from the 4, Indiana initially called the field-goal unit on the field. After a timeout, Cignetti sent the offense back out and Mendoza, on a quarterback draw, bounced off defenders and dove into the end zone for the touchdown.

"They called that play and we knew, 'Hey, we're going to bet on ourselves one more time in the biggest (moment) of the game,' " Mendoza said.

In a way, this is what so many fans wanted. A college football postseason with the suspense of an NCAA basketball tournament.

Alabama, Clemson, Georgia and Ohio State had become as ubiquitous in January as Dick Clark and Times Square. From 2014-22, there was not a single national championship game without at least one of those teams. And six of those games included some variation of two of those programs playing each other.

That's the hierarchy the transfer portal torched. And this is the future that name, image and likeness money has begat.

Miami, on Monday night, was playing in a national title game for the first time in 23 years. The last time Indiana had even a whiff of national title consideration was when the Hoosiers lost, 14-3, to No. 1 USC in the 1968 Rose Bowl and finished No. 4 in the final Associated Press poll.

It's a new era of college football.

It's not perfect, by any means. It's not beloved by traditionalists aghast with players jumping from school to school, and it's practically blasphemous for programs accustomed to sitting atop the mountaintop.

But, as the 2025 season demonstrated, there is something exhilarating about the unknown. Something thrilling about new faces and stories.

Something remarkable about a program that could endure 26 losing seasons in 30 years and, with a new coach on board, emerge to go 27-2 across his first two seasons and win a national championship.

Welcome to the new world order.

A deposit need not accompany each oral bid. If the successful bid is oral, a deposit of $16,636.98 must be presented before the bidding is closed. The deposit is nonrefundable. The remainder of the purchase price must be delivered within 30 days of the sale or at such other time as the Secretary may determine for good cause shown, time being of the essence. This amount, like the bid deposits, must be delivered in the form of a certified or cashier's check. If the Secretary is the high bidder, he/she/they need not pay the bid amount in cash. If the high bidder closes the sale prior to the expiration of any extension period, the unused portion of the extension fee shall be applied toward the amount due.

The Commissioner may, at the direction of the HUD Representative, offer the Property to the second highest bidder for an amount equal to the highest price offered by that bidder.

There is no right of redemption, or right of possession based upon a right of redemption, in the mortgagor or others subsequent to a foreclosure completed pursuant to the Act. Therefore, the Foreclosure Commissioner will issue a Deed to the purchaser upon receipt of the entire purchase price in accordance with the terms of the sale, as provided herein. HUD does not guarantee that the property will be vacant.

The scheduled foreclosure sale shall be cancelled or adjourned if it is established, by documented written application of the mortgagor to the Foreclosure Commissioner not less than 3 days before the date of sale, or otherwise, that the default or defaults upon which the foreclosure is based did not exist at the time of service of this notice of default and foreclosure sale, or all amounts due under the mortgage agreement are tendered to the Foreclosure Commissioner, in the form of a certified or cashier's check payable to the Secretary of HUD, before public auction of the property is completed.

The mortgage cannot be "reinstated" prior to sale, as the event triggering acceleration was not a default in payments. Payment of the entire outstanding balance of the mortgage debt is required to stop the foreclosure. The "outstanding balance" includes amounts that would be due under the mortgage had not been accelerated, advertising costs, posting costs and postage expenses incurred in giving notice, mileage by the most reasonable road distance for posting notices, reasonable and customary costs incurred for title and lien record searches, the necessary out-of-pocket costs incurred by the Foreclosure Commissioner for recording documents, a commission for the Foreclosure and all other costs incurred in connection with the foreclosure prior to the sale.

All extensions will be for 15-day increments for a fee of $500.00, paid in advance. The extension fee shall be in the form of a certified or cashier's check made payable to the Secretary of HUD. If the high bidder closes the sale prior to the expiration of any extension period, the unused portion of the extension fee shall be applied toward the amount due. If the high bidder is unable to close the sale within the required period, or within any extensions of time granted by the Secretary, the high bidder may be required to forfeit the case deposit or, at the election of the foreclosure commissioner after the consultation with the HUD representative, will be liable to HUD for any costs incurred as a result of such failure. The Commissioner may, at the direction of the HUD representative, offer the property to the second highest bidder for an amount equal to the highest price offered by that bidder. There is no right of redemption, or right of possession based upon a right of redemption, in the mortgagor or others subsequent to a foreclosure completed pursuant to the Act. Therefore, the Foreclosure Commissioner will issue a Deed to the purchaser(s) upon receipt of the entire purchase price in accordance with the terms of the sale as provided herein. HUD does not guarantee that the property will be vacant. The scheduled foreclosure sale shall be cancelled or adjourned if it is established, by documented written application of the mortgagor to the Foreclosure Commissioner not less than 3 days before the date of sale, or otherwise, that the default or defaults upon which the foreclosure is based did not exist at the time of service of this notice of default and foreclosure sale, or all amounts due under the mortgage agreement are tendered to the Foreclosure Commissioner, in the form of a certified or cashier's check payable to the Secretary of HUD, before public auction of the property is completed. Bear hunters recorded another robust season in Michigan in 2025, harvesting nearly 2,000 animals and bringing home a remarkable number of large bears in the Upper Peninsula.

At the Escanaba-area check stations alone, the Michigan Department of Natural Resources registered an estimated 20 bears above 400 pounds and eight bears above 500 pounds, according to Cody Norton, the DNR's bear, furbearer and small game specialist.

"We saw a phenomenal number of unusually large bears harvested across the Upper Peninsula," said Norton, a Marquette-based wildlife biologist and avid bear hunter. "This is something we've been working toward with our long-term bear management plan – growing the total number of bears and giving hunters more opportunities to harvest large, mature animals."

The strong harvest comes as Michigan celebrates 100 years of regulated bear hunting and demand for bear licenses is at an all-time high. The DNR uses hunting as a primary tool to manage a sustainable black bear population, which sits at about 12,500 statewide.

Hunters in Michigan harvested 1,952 black bears in 2025, according to preliminary numbers from the DNR. That's slightly above the state's five-year average of 1,911 bears harvested per year.

In the U.P. – home to 83 percent of Michigan's bears – hunters harvested 1,522 bears during the September/October hunting season. In the northern Lower Peninsula, hunters harvested 430 bears.

While bears are not weighed at all state-managed check stations, wildlife experts estimate their weight. Norton said the significant number of large bears harvested in the U.P. indicates the presence of more mature animals and a good year for food sources, such as vegetation and berries.

In the eastern U.P., Paulla Schemm harvested her first bear Sept. 16, which weighed more than 200 pounds.

Schemm, a veteran hunter from Flushing, said she and her husband benefited from the DNR's bear hunting clinic in Cadillac. She wants to inspire more people to hunt.

"I'd like to keep the spirit alive – particularly in getting more women and children interested in hunting," said Schemm, who harvested the bear in the Newberry area. "Hunting is a part of conservation. It's important."

'Greatest' experience

Milton Miller, 97, shot a bear this fall near his hunting cabin in the northeastern Lower Peninsula. The nearly 300-pound boar was Miller's first Michigan-harvested bear. He previously killed one in Alberta, Canada.

Miller had applied for a bear hunting license for nine consecutive years in the Red Oak bear management unit, which encompasses his property in Alcona County. He finally drew a tag last year.

"Shooting this bear was probably, of all my hunting experiences, the greatest one," said Miller, a retired bridge inspector from Macomb Township. His story was chronicled in Outdoor Life.

Anne Christman helped her neighbor Milton Miller track and field-dress this bear in Alcona County after he made the hunt alone.

In mid-September, Miller had been hunting with his grandson for several days with no luck. On the afternoon of Sept. 15, his grandson had to work, so Miller headed into the woods alone, driving an ATV a half-mile from his cabin to his blind. He parked and walked the last few hundred yards, settling into the blind about 3 p.m.

Nothing happened all afternoon. But just as Miller was gathering his gear, a bear came out of the woods and headed to the bait in front of his blind. Miller lifted his rifle to shoot, just as a bigger bear appeared.

The first bear ambled by his blind to hit the bait as he waited for the second bear to walk closer. When the bigger bear was about 35 feet away, Miller put the crosshairs of his rifle behind the animal's shoulder and pulled the trigger.

The bear ran back into the woods. There was no visible blood, and Miller thought he may have missed. He texted a friend, Anne Christman, who told him to stay in the blind until she got there. It took Christman an hour to get to Miller, and they began tracking the bear together.

They saw blood in the woods, and after about 40 yards, they found the bear. Together, they field-dressed the animal, then loaded it into Miller's ATV and he drove back to his cabin. Miller covered the bear in ice and finally got to bed around 2 a.m.

When contacted in early December about his harvest, Miller, a widower, was thawing a steak from the boar for dinner. The Army veteran has outlived two hunting partners but said his passion for hunting remains.

"I still love to hunt," he said.

Record applications

Michigan's popular bear hunt is based on a preference point system that rewards persistence. Hunters earn one point for each year they apply and are unsuccessful at drawing a license. Those with the most accumulated points are selected annually to fill quotas in each of the 10 bear management units.

Licenses generally take longer to get in the Lower Peninsula due to the smaller bear population and high demand.

The DNR sets a desired bear harvest to establish license quotas and manage the bear population. License quotas are calculated using the average hunter success rate over the previous few years for each management unit and hunt period. Statewide, the hunter success rate is hovering around 40 percent.

Norton said the desired harvest has hit the mark pretty closely over the past few years, falling within about 15 percent of the goal. An increasing bear population in the U.P. has resulted in harvest above goal, while a more stabilized bear population in the Lower Peninsula has seen harvest very consistent with goals. The next adjustments will be made for the cycle of bear hunting regulations covering 2027-2028.

Hunters can apply for either a bear hunting license or a preference point toward a future hunt. In 2025, nearly 73,000 hunters applied for either a license or a preference point – the most ever recorded since Michigan started regulating bear hunting in 1925.

Using the whole bear

In Michigan, bear hunters can use bait or dogs. Norton has harvested two bears using bait in the past. This year, for the first time, he harvested a bear using his dog, a bluetick coonhound named, simply, B.

Norton and a group of fellow hunters tracked the 150-pound boar through the woods near Channing in Dickinson County in the central Upper Peninsula. B and several other hounds were able to tree the bear, and Norton made a successful rifle shot for his third harvest.

"I skinned and butchered the bear myself the day I harvested it," Norton said. "We ate the heart and tenderloins that night. For cuts of meat, I cut backstraps, steaks and roasts and then froze the rest to grind it up."

Several years ago, Michigan passed a law that edible bear meat must be used, which most hunters already do, Norton noted. He said the change makes it clear to the public that harvested bears are being consumed and that the resource is not being wasted.

"I like bear meat more than venison," Norton said. "The meat is richer and fattier, and the fat is not waxy like deer tallow. It also tastes sweeter to me. The only caveat is that it needs to be cooked well-done – to at least 160 degrees – in order to kill any potential trichinella parasites."

Norton cubed the bear fat and will render it into grease. He uses the grease as cooking oil for meat and vegetables, bakes with it and even uses it to condition his boots.

"This winter, I'll also be fleshing, stretching and drying the bear hide before sending it to a tannery," Norton said. "It will probably end up living on the back of the couch as a way to remember the hunt."

Michigan approves electronic kill tags for hunters, so how will they work?

By LAURA HERBERG
Bridge Michigan

Starting March 1, Michigan hunters will no longer need to display paper kill tags on certain animals.

Instead, they'll be able to validate kills using the Hunt Fish mobile app.

The change comes after the Natural Resources Commission on Wednesday approved the optional use of electronic kill tags for deer, bobcat, bear, fisher, marten and otter.

The Michigan Department of Natural Resources has been piloting digital kill tags for turkey hunters since fall 2024, but otherwise hunters have needed to use a physical kill tag, which can be picked up at a license agent or received through the mail.

Having a digital tag option is expected to save the department money by reducing printing and distribution costs. It may also make things more convenient for hunters by allowing them to buy a tag online in the days leading up to a hunt and by making it easier to keep track of their tag once purchased.

According to the DNR, 27,475 hunters lost their paper licenses and had to purchase another in 2024.

How will this actually work? Read on for questions and answers.

How will I be able to purchase an electronic kill tag?

Once you download the Hunt Fish app on your smartphone, you will be able to purchase a tag inside the app.

How will the electronic kill tag actually work?

Once you make a kill, you will open your app and validate the kill by answering a few questions. If you do not have cell service or are unable to connect to WiFi, you can still fill out the information on your phone. Once you get cell service or connect to WiFi, the data will be uploaded.

How will conservation officers know that my hunt was legal?

If a conservation officer requests to see your kill tag and you purchased it electronically, you can open the Hunt Fish app to show them the tag. If you have not had cell service or WiFi since the kill, you can still show them the validated kill tag you entered on your phone.

What happens if my phone is dead?

If your phone dies, a conservation officer can run your ID to find out if you purchased a tag and what kind of tag it was. If your tag was validated and uploaded via cell service or WiFi before your phone died, the conservation officer will be able to see that.

What if I'm not with the carcass?

You may not always be right there with the body of the animal you hunted to present an electronic tag. For example, you may leave it at a buck pole or have a friend drive it for you.

In instances like those, you will need to make a tag out of durable material with the hunting license number written on it in permanent ink and attach it to the carcass.

There are, however, some exceptions:

1. If the head is no longer attached to the carcass, then the durable tag only needs to be with the head.
2. If the animal's remains are stored at your primary residence, you won't need to worry about having a physical tag for it.
3. If the carcass or head is accepted and recorded by a commercial processor or taxidermist, a physical tag no longer needs to be attached to it.

What happens if I get my deer tested?

In Michigan, deer may be tested for diseases like bovine tuberculosis or chronic wasting disease, especially in counties where the disease is being actively surveilled.

If you take your deer head or carcass to a disease sample submission site for testing and you have an electronic tag, your phone will have the same information that you would have on a paper tag. The station can use that information to process your dropoff. The facility will then tag your deer head or any sample you drop off so that it can be properly tracked during the testing process.

What other states have electronic kill tags or something similar?

According to the DNR, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, and Wisconsin also use apps and digital tags.

Can I still use a paper kill tag?

Yes. Electronic kill tags will be optional, not mandatory. You can still purchase a physical kill tag and pick it up at a license agent or get it through the mail.
